(Special Correspondence of The Virginian.)
RADFORD, VA., August 16, 1895.—
To one who for ten years has been absent from that section, a visit to that portion of Southwest Virginia penetrated by the main line and branches of the Norfolk and Western railroad will be such a revelation as the discovering of our unknown land to the explorer. Just about a decade ago I traveled over horseback through most of the territory now traversed by the Ohio extension and the Clinch Valley line. It is a land of beauty and fertility, of finest mineral wealth them as now; but then its beauty was only to be seen by the few who would or could endure the discomfort incident to primitive modes of travel; then its fer-[Special Correspondence of The Virginian.] be seen by the few who would or could endure the discomfort incident to primitive modes of travel; then its fertility contributed little or nothing to the markets of the world; then its giants of ash, maple and walnut found immunity from the axe in the absence of means of transportation, and the coal and iron, with which the mountains teamed, lay as idle and profitless to the uses of man as when first fused into shape by the mysterial residual contributes the second of the uses of man as when first fused into shape by the mysterial residual contributes. to the uses of man as when first fused into shape by the mysterious forces of nature's laboratory. Then, too, the country was sparsely settled, the villages few in number and insignificant in trade and population, and under the difficulties of great distances and of rough roads or no roads at all, inter communication was rare between the people, and churches and extraction. people, and churches and schoolhouse people, and churches and schoolhouses—those twin lights of civilization and progress—were few and far between.

Now, all this is changed. Not by magic, but by the far seeing liberality of policy with which the Norlolk and Western management has devoted its energies to the building up and development of the local territory of their lines. Temporary emburrassment may have been caused by expensive construction through the rugged passes which guard our Western boundry, but the eventual outcome mast vindicate the wisdom, as well as the public spirit of the work which the lamented Eddy inaugurated, so ably seconded by Sands and other co adjutors. All really great raniway enterprises have, as the Sands and other co adjutors. All really great railway enterprises have, as the main source of successful operation, looked to the creation of business be tween their owner's termini. Every additional house creeted, every extra acre of ground planted, every industry means that much more volume of a remeans that much more volume of a re-established, every immigrant attracted, liable tradic with which no competitor can interfere, and to that condition of a large and stable local business the Norfolk and Western is rapidly ap-proaching unless all the signs of time and place are deceptive. To be convinced of this one has only to select as a vantage point such a central station as Roanoke or Radford, and witness the streams of travel and and witness the streams of travel and tonnage pouring in and out by numerous trains; or, better still, to take passage on the main line or either of the important stems, and gather wonder and satisfaction from the symptoms of thrift and prosperity, and which everywhere abound. Substantial towns have sprung up here, there and everywhere; and the older settlements have put on the guise of cities, with electric lights. and the older settlements have put on the guise of cities, with electric lights, street cars, and all the appliances of modern progress. Every sort of pro-duction has been stimulated, thus nices-sitating the establishment of new sta-tions at every few miles of the way. respondent to make some enquiry into the recent strike and present status of affairs in this mining district. The sentiment of people generally is that, whatever griovances the miners may have bad originally, the attempted modes of redress were ill-judged and intemperate. That violence was seriously threatened, and that under the incitement of lawless leaders the peace would have been broken but for Gov. O'Ferrall's wise precantiou, is the judgment of all conservative minds. The ment of all conservative minds. The syidence on both points seems to me conclusive. The Governor took a grave responsibility, took it bravely and wisely, and he is deserving of praise, not criticism.

Affairs at present are quiet and likely to remain so, notwithstanding the va-porings of the walking delegates and the mutterings of those who prefer to the mutterings of those who prefer to retain a grievance rather than return to work. The force now employed is sufficient for a much larger output than that which preceded the strike, and is thoroughly reliable. The owners are not rejecting union men, but adhere to their determination to retain the non-union labor which came to their rescue at a critical time. I understand that the present rate of shipment, if continued until November 1st, will more than compensate the shortage incurred than compensate the shortage incurred during the shut down of the riots.

Police Commissioners' Reply to the

We, the undersigned Police Commissioners, having borne with such patience as we could command for many mouths the false and misleading rumors that we were usurping the powers or prerogatives of the Mayor, which we know emanated from the friends, papers and attorneys of the worst criminal class, and so long as these criminal class, and so long as these criminal class, and so long as these unions were chiefly confined to that class we retrained from any public unotice of them.

Mayor Pettit has, in thought the whites were governed to make were governed to the whites were governed to make were governed to the whites were governed to the sale of shares, in the city yesterday. He was quite san guite over the progress they are making in regard to the sale of shares, in the city yesterday over three times the minimum cautal. New Hogland the minimum cautal. New Hogland

We at last concluded to accept the only honorable course left and indeed forced upon us by the inefficiency of the Mayor and to hold our meetings and attend to all the business of the disport as though we had no Mayor.

The result is a good and effective organization of the department and the reign of good order throughout the city. This we will maintain until we are succeeded in a legal way by those who may be chosen by the Councils for that purpose.

Conscious that we have not only songlit, but secured the safety of the abide the calm and righteous judgment of our fellow citizens.
